Q: How to differentiate between two different types of post codes? I have a client who has almost 5,000 postcodes. I'm assuming they all need to be typed in with thousands of entries. Is there a way to differentiate these different postcode formats? The site is based in the UK. A: I would do the following. First, make sure the post codes in your database has "country code" as parameter. This is a way of checking if the the post code is valid or not. This helps save you time as you don't have to test every country and every code in the post code. Second, make sure you filter for country codes in your query. Here is an example of how to find the country codes in your database. Get all the postcodes in your database. Find the post codes that are not valid and remove them. Find the post codes that are valid and update them to that country code. Using this example, the result would be either GB, IT, NL, AT, AU You can use your own country codes or use the ISO codes. The last thing you can do is to use your country code as your unique key. I did this in a few projects and it was a good method to differentiate them, however, it has its caveats. [Genetic marker systems of the Escherichia coli K-12 species]. including those lacking natural antigens and those with complicated gene sets such as with lambda prophage. These strains as well as E. coli
