A 6-O-tetraacetylated derivative of daunomycin has been synthesized and used to determine the solution structure of this anthracycline by NMR spectroscopy. The solution structure of daunomycin has been solved independently by superposition of 19 carbon chemical shifts, a total of 18 NOEs, and 28 hydrogen-bonded interproton distance constraints. Comparison with the X-ray structure of daunomycin reveals that the anthracycline pharmacophore of daunomycin contains unusual sugar, carboxylate, and aromatic substituents. This work shows that in the recently synthesized analogues of daunomycin and adriamycin with improved in vivo and in vitro activity, the pharmacophore of the analogues is also more compatible with the "orthodox" anthracy
